disruptive media learning lab

Situated on the top floor of Coventry University's Lanchester Library, the Disruptive Media Learning Lab is at the heart of the university city campus.

After its transformation from a library floor to an innovative teaching and learning space, the Disruptive Media Learning lab (DMLL) now has experimental spaces: the Grass (an open grass amphitheater); the Hill (open wooden pyramid); the teaching room and three themed project rooms called Circles, Wood and Curves.

The DMLL is a cross-university experimental unit comprising of academics, learning technologists, subject librarians, educational developers and researchers. It has been uniquely designed to promote open dialogues, collaborative work and exploratory play for all interested in defining the 21st century university.

A venue for any occasion. From group study work to conferences; the aims to be a little different with its open, collaborative and unique spaces.
